2.1 First Reading

Mau! Goes Fishing is a story from New Zealand about a boy who uses a magic fishhook to catch New Zealand. Mau's four older brothers never get his job in their fun. One morning, they all got up early to go sea fishing in their special canoe. Mau wanted to go too, but his older brothers just laughed at him and said no. But Mau ignored them. He had magic powers that his family didn't know about. While his brothers got ready, Mau decided to use his magic. When he was a baby, he had been given a magic bone by the ocean spirits. He hid it in a secret box. He took out the bone and made it into a fishing hook. Then he climbed into the canoe and hid inside a bucket. The four brothers took the canoe out into the deep ocean. When they were far out at sea, they found Mau. They were angry. Mau stayed down the bottom end of the canoe and quietly dropped the magic fishhook into the water. His brothers caught many fish and were very happy. But all of a sudden, Mau felt a powerful pull on his line. It was so strong that Mau was scared that he might be dragged into the water. His four brothers helped him pull out and pull out. Suddenly they pulled up a very very big piece of land! It was shaped like a fish. Mau was worried that the ocean spirits would be angry with him for catching the island, so he dove into the sea to ask for them to forgive him. Before he went, he asked his four brothers to look after his fish. However, they ignored him and his greedy brothers started to hack and chop at the fish-shaped land, trying to steal little bits of it for themselves. This is why New Zealand has so many mountains. To this day, the North Island is also known as Te Ika a Māui - or the Fish of Mau!
